Trio Bookworks is a team of three experienced book publishing professionals who work collaboratively to manage the entire process from manuscript to printer-ready files, or to take care of one or a few tasks such as copyediting, book design, and typesetting. While specializing in scholarly and academic trade titles, we work in a broad range of subject areas.

Subject areas include religion, history, archaeology, social sciences, women's studies, GLBT studies, African American studies, education, literature, creative nonfiction, music, popular science, and cultural studies.

Clients include Fortress Press, University of Notre Dame Press, Basic Books, Minnesota Historical Society Press, Borealis Books, Redleaf Press, Counterpoint Press, Cowley Publications, CDS Books (an imprint of Perseus Books Group), The Pilgrim Press, and The Alban Institute.

Beth Wright worked at Fortress Press (Minneapolis) for almost six years as a production editor and then assistant managing editor. Before her stint at Fortress, she wrote and edited newsletters and other print products for a nonprofit disability advocacy organization. Originally from Berkeley, she graduated with a B.A. (Carleton College, Northfield, Minn.), with a major in religion and significant coursework in English literature. She is a rabid University of Minnesota women's hockey fan.

Ann Delgehausen spent two years working on music resources before committing her editorial efforts to Fortress Press for five years as a production editor, followed by a year as marketing manager for both Fortress Press and Augsburg Books. Along with a B.A. in religion (Gustavus Adolphus College, St. Peter, Minn., where she also studied music and geology), she finds that her library work, excavation experience (Tel Miqne-Ekron, Israel), and riverboat bartending prepared her for publishing.

Zan Ceeley has ten years' experience in publishing, including five years at Fortress Press as a production editor and later as assistant managing editor. Prior to Fortress Press, she was on the editorial staff at the University of Notre Dame Press and the Journal of Religion and Literature. She has a B.A. (Hope College, Holland, Mich.) and an M.A. (University of Notre Dame, South Bend, Ind.), both in English literature. She is an avid urban bicyclist.
